

Conference, Expo & Convention Centers

Nearly every jurisdiction in the United States has some form of meeting facility—whether it is equipped to handle small gatherings or citywide conventions of several thousand attendees. Conference, exposition and convention centers are regarded as one of the most potent asset classes with respect to generating positive economic impact results for a community. For cities, they are typically a primary consideration for financial backing so that the regional economy can benefit from the direct, indirect and induced impacts that these facilities generate.

Newmark Valuation & Advisory's (V&A) experts are veterans in the analysis of these types of facilities and how their ancillary contributions to the community impact the value not only of the projects themselves, but also of the surrounding properties. We have a sensible approach to evaluating these often loss-leading projects so that all components of value are unlocked.
